

Design-2-Part Magazine Wins Three Awards at 2019 Folio: Eddie & Ozzie Awards Gala

NEW YORK — (November 6, 2019) — Design-2-Part magazine took home three first-place awards for editorial excellence in the B2B Single Article category at the recent Folio: Eddie & Ozzie Awards in New York City.

The winning articles, written by Design-2-Part Editorial Director Mark Shortt, are The Robots Are Coming, But Not the Way You Imagined (November 2018), which took first place in Supply Chain/Product Development; Disruptive Technologies Are Changing Automakers' Needs, Creating Opportunities for Suppliers (March 2019), which received top honors in Automotive; and Solving Aerospace Manufacturing's Complex Riddle (May 2019), which won in Aerospace, Aviation, & Defense.

The awards marked the first time that Design-2-Part had three first-place winners in the competition. The magazine received top honors in two categories—Manufacturing and Supply Chain/Product Development—in 2017 and 2018.

More than 300 industry professionals gathered at the New York Hilton Midtown on October 30th to celebrate the Eddie & Ozzie Awards for excellence in magazine editorial and design. Brands from all across the publishing space submitted over 2,500 entries, competing to take home the gold across dozens of categories.

Design-2-Part magazine helps OEMs find the resources they need to solve tough manufacturing problems and build higher-quality products. The magazine provides in-depth reporting and analysis of significant developments, trends, and technologies that are shaping American manufacturing, impacting the roles of design and manufacturing engineers, and enabling them to develop and manufacture innovative, high-quality products more quickly and cost-effectively.
